

Teaching Little Ones About World Mission Broadcast

For those of us who have been a part of NMI for many years, when we say World Mission Broadcast, we think radios, Internet, and television. But many children have never even seen just a radio. So when we say World Mission Broadcast, they may not even know what is meant.

To help children develop an understanding of radios, Jana Beth Slibeck Francis of Owensboro, Kentucky, First Church, purchased individual cereal boxes. After the students enjoyed the cereal snack, they used the empty cereal boxes to create “radios” using construction paper, tape, scissors, glue, aluminum foil, markers, and crayons.

In addition, the students spent time discussing and drawing what the words “world,” “mission,” and broadcast meant to them.

Each student was able to take home a unique radio along with new knowledge of how World Mission Broadcast is being used to reach people around the world.

World Mission Broadcast—36 languages, 72 countries, 140 programs. Countries yet to be reached with World Mission Broadcast—123.

Visit www.worldmissionbroadcast.org for more information and ideas including bulletin inserts, verbal announcements, videos, PowerPoint presentations, and last-minute promotions and ideas.

Lola Brickey
East Central U.S.A. Regional
Global Council Representative